WHY UNCAS PRESENTED NORWICH TO THE ENGLISH

Soon after the destruction of the Pequots by Captain Mason, the Narragansetts of Rhode Island who were the most numerous tribe in New England, became jealous of Uncas because of the respect the English paid to him and because of the small power with which they were vested.

Without giving Uncas warning and without any proclamation of war they raised an army of one thousand men and marched against him; but the wily Uncas, having his spies out who discovered their approach, received warning. Uncas was unprepared but setting together 500 picked men he advanced to meet them; after having marched three or four miles the Mohegans met the enemy on an extensive plain. When within bowshot Uncas resolved on stratagem which he had previously arranged with his warriors. He desired a parley, which being granted, both armies halted. Uncas gallantly advanced in front of his men and addressed the Narragansett sachem, Mintinomi, to this effect:—

"You have a number of stout men with you; so have I with me. It is a great pity that so many warriors should be killed because of a misunderstanding between you and me. Come, like a brave man you profess to be and let us decide this dispute alone. If you kill me my men shall be yours; if I kill you your men shall be mine."

"No," replied Mintinomi. "My men have come to fight and they shall fight." Upon which, Uncas flinging himself upon the ground, his men discharged a shower of arrows, and rushing upon the Narragansetts, he hid his yells put them to flight. The Mohegans pursued them with great fury. They drove them before them like the "dus" down rocks and precipices. Many to escape the fury of their pursuers plunged into the river from rocks nearly sixty feet high.

Mintinomi was hard pushed by Uncas' men who twisted him into a circle till Uncas could come up and capture him himself. Uncas was a man of great bodily strength, rushed forward like a lion greedy for the prey; and seized Mintinomi by the shoulder; when giving the warwhoop he called his men to his assistance. It was a complete victory; about 50 Narragansetts were killed, and as many more made prisoners. Uncas conducted Mintinomi to the English in Hartford and consulted with them what to do with his prisoner, who begged to be placed in the custody of the English; but as it was proved that he had formed a conspiracy to exterminate all the colonies, he was delivered back to Uncas who executed him near the spot where he was captured. He was buried under a pile of stones and the place was given the name of "Sachem Plains" which is situated in the eastern corner of Norwich.

The Narragansetts were very angry over the loss of their chief and continually invaded Uncas' territory. By killing in ambush they killed many of his men. The English, who had sent a message to them stating that unless they ceased to molest Uncas they would send an army against them, but long replied "That nothing would satisfy them but the head of Uncas and that they would kill any Englishman or Mohegan who came within their reach." The English, who had been told that the Narragansetts found that the English were raising an army to protect Uncas, were ready to sue for peace on any terms the English would accept. The English required them to return all the captives and canoes they had taken from Uncas and to pay him an annual tribute of 2000 fathoms of wampum. This was a hard blow to the Narragansetts for they were also to have perpetual peace with both the English and the Mohegans; but the memory of the Pequot war was too clear in refuse, so peace was made and kept.

It was during these wars with the Narragansetts that Uncas was besieged for a long time by the enemy. They soon found themselves facing either death by the tomahawk or by starvation. Uncas managed to send his spies to Saybrook and so acquaint the English of his necessity. He set forth the fact before them that if the Mohegans should be conquered the English would be in great danger; but just at that time the troops were employed in an expedition abroad; and so a Mr. Thomas Lettingwell loaded canoes with provisions and under cover of night paddled up the river from Saybrook, keeping the Narragansetts in the dark, and succeeded in landing in the forest where the war were met by Uncas' spies who received the provisions.

Thus relieved Uncas was able to drive away the enemy. And in return for this service he presented Thomas Lettingwell with what is now the whole town of Norwich but which was not settled until the spring of 1660, when James Pich led his congregation into the wilderness.

For many years the new town of Norwich was protected by Uncas who moved his village near to protect his friends, the English. So again did this wonderful savage establish his high character for faithfulness to the white man.

FAMOUS EDUCATOR ILL. LOSTS USE OF EYES

Educators and many others throughout the country read with deep regret of the illness of Dr. James B. Angell, president emeritus of the University of Michigan, who is confined to his home and is reported to be in a seriously weakened condition as the result of overexertion in attempting to reply personally to several hundred congratulatory letters received on his eighty-seventh birthday. The work on his correspondence proved too severe a strain on his failing sight, and the aged educator is now said to be unable to use his eyes. His physicians, however, say he may recover his sight in time.

HAS WON RENOWN AS ENGLAND'S "KITCHEN GARDEN"

Egypt Has Made Great Progress Under European Leadership During Past Generation.

(Special to The Bulletin.)

Washington, D. C., Feb. 13.—"From a forbidding, arid waste-land, famed where naturally fertile barely for a frugal daily fare, into a land of numerous farms and plantations, of ever-extending irrigation nets and increasing profusions of green and gold and resset vegetation, is the story of Egypt's progress under European leadership during the past generation. Where the fame of Egypt of old was for thuggery and revolution, the modern land was earning renown as a wonderful winter playgrounds for tourists and as England's Kitchen Garden," says a statement given out by the National Geographic Society at Washington, which discusses the Nile-land as the granary, vegetable, garden, orchard, and poultry yard to the great congested centers of the north.

"The long, fruitful farm that follows the Nile banks through hundreds of miles of desert and spreads out over the wide delta, today, with the people of the most productive countries in the world in trenches and in training camps, has come into first-rank importance as a source of foodstuffs. For the past thirty years, the progress of Nile-control and of great irrigation projects has been preparing the country for strong competition in all of the larger produce markets of Europe. The number of farm holdings include 5,500,000 acres of land.

"And there is labor a-plenty in the country for the development of every square rod of area reclaimed; for Egypt is one of the most densely settled lands in the world. Its habitable area is given as 12,026 square miles, and its density of population at 939 persons per square mile. Belgium, before the war, the most thickly settled country in Europe, had a density of 589 per square mile. The enormous growth in agricultural resources has stimulated in Egypt an increase of population equalled by few other lands in old world areas besides Germany. Cities, villages, roads, railways and canals have sprung up out of the profits of the Nile bonanza farm.

"At the time the war broke out, irrigation projects were in prospect that would have reclaimed nearly 2,000,000 acres more of land. The cost of all of these works had been estimated at something more than $100,000,000. Cotton was first of the plantation crops, with an apparently glowing future before it. Rice was the principal grain export, being sold to a value of about $1,250,000. Fresh eggs on the London breakfast tables were largely Egyptian, the value of this product taken each year by Great Britain averaging around $600,000. There were, also, important quantities of fancy Egyptian vegetables sold in London markets, and a thriving canner industry was in the course of upbuilding.

"Moreover, agricultural Egypt just began to gather headway during the past ten years. It was just beginning to realize a fraction of the production that a proper development of its lands could be expected to bring about. Its out-of-season vegetables, grown at a time when the fields of Europe's great vegetable gardens still lie frost-bound, had enjoyed scarce half a decade of demand in northern markets, though they compared in quality with the fancy vegetables, the first aristocracy of vegetable foods, grown on the little garden plots in Northern France and in Belgium, the coaxed and coddled cultivations of zealous small gardeners. Egypt gave promise of becoming England's fairest farm."

Frictionless America.

There is more than one way to reduce friction in the world. And though the United States may not be entirely successful in bringing peace out of the Great War, we can at least claim that we smooth the way of the world in one respect.

For the United States produces more soap than all the rest of the world combined. Moreover, our production has nearly doubled in the last decade so that we now produce about 170,000 short tons a year, valued at about $1,800,000.

Soap is a simple mineral of which soapstone is a massive impure form. Because of its softness it has a wide and varied use; talcum powder can be used for putting a tire on an automobile or for face paint. One of its chief uses is as a filler for many kinds of paper.

There are nine States in our country that produce soap. Fifty-seven per cent of it comes from New York and about forty per cent—mostly in the form of soapstone—from Vermont.—The Independent.

Jobs Still Safe.

"Former Governor Stubbs of Kansas, is assisting Billy Sunday at Trenton," remarks the Houston Post. "If the preacher don't look out the door, and out politicians like Stubbs, Patterson, Glenn, Bryan, Hanly, Hobson and others will euvre them out of their pulpits." Not until they get the Constitution amended fixing a minimum wage for preachers.—Washington Herald.

One Difficulty.

The trouble about giving United States Steel stock as bridge prizes is that your guests are apt to sneer because it isn't Bethlehem.—Boston Transcript.
